

---

Hennesey Hammock

Posted by Carlton - 05/27/2004 12:47pm

---

I've been using a treeboat with good suces, but I'm curious about the fully enclosed Henessey hammocks. Has anyone tried them while aloft? Can you get into it while aloft and how do you rate this hammock? I realize you cannot be fully enclosed and remain tied in, of course, but can you get into it while hanging in your saddle and then leave a small opening for your rope? Any feedback on this hammock would be appreciated!

Happy climbing!

-Carlton

---

Posted by NickfromWI - 05/27/2004 02:36pm

---

These are the ones with the velcro opening in the bottome of the hammock. I have not figured out a way to get into the thing while suspended from above. I say it's near impossible.

love

nick

---

Hennesey Hammock

Posted by rtrem - 05/30/2004 11:05pm

---

I recently looked at these as well. They looked intriguing. The thought of your tie in coming out the bottom of the hammock seemed just perfect.

I called Hennesey and explained that I was interested in using it at height, while tied in at all times. I was told this product is not made for this. I was not offered any advice or ideas. Even if this was the best hammock made, I wouldn't buy one because the people at the company treated me badly.

I did purchase a Crazy Crib by Crazy Creek for about $100. Very nice. Allows almost flat sleeping with a built in mosquito net.

Bob

---

Crazy Crib - used yet?

Posted by wahoo101 - 06/01/2004 03:05pm

---

Camping in the trees is a goal my son and I have not met yet. Looking for a reasonably priced hammock/semi-rigid platform that allows easy/safe entry and tie off. You said you had bought a Crazy Crib for $100. Have you spent the night in it yet? If so, how was it?

---

Posted by NickfromWI - 06/01/2004 07:11pm

---

I can't comment on how you were treated by the people at hennesey, but I have to say I agree with their point. They design their hammocks for use a few feet off the ground.

I still want to see someone get in to one of these hammock while suspended from overhead.

love

nick

---

---

=====

Hennesy hammocks

Posted by Carlton - 06/04/2004 12:30pm

---

Thanks for the input fellas-think I'll check out those Crazy Creek products now.
Hang loose,er,tight I mean.
-Carlton

=====

Speer hammock

Posted by Patrick - 06/04/2004 03:27pm

---

You may also want to check out www.speerhammocks.com. Ed Speer makes hammocks and also sells kits to make your own. I made my own. It worked really well.
He also has another site, www.hammockcamping.com, that offers a lot of information and ideas about hammocks.

=====

Posted by Mutt - 06/07/2004 03:53pm

---

Originally posted by NickfromWI

I can't comment on how you were treated by the people at hennessey, but I have to say I agree with their point. They design their hammocks for use a few feet off the ground.

Yes, they are a backpackers-only kind of tent. They are lightweight and rather fragile compared to other hammock tents. The bottom opening is a rather silly gimmick. But, the transverse angle at which you lay is pretty comfortable, as it is pretty much flat. I like mine, but I don't consider it a serious hammock tent. And yes, I have used it climbing, but only once where the setup was perfect: a flatish limb right under the hammock to stand on allowed me to enter the tent like I would on the ground.

=====

Posted by NickfromWI - 07/02/2004 03:03pm

---

Sawmill, I'd like to see more pictures, but can you shrink them to about 25% of the original size? It's way too huge to even see on my screen!

love
nick

=====